Today's US News

After the S&P 500 ended in correction territory amid increasing tensions between Russia and Ukraine, U. S. stock market futures were moderately higher in overnight trade Tuesday.

In just over a month, new omicron infections in the United States have dropped by 90%. On average, the United States reports roughly 84,000 new cases per day, down from a pandemic high of almost 800,000 daily cases on Jan. 15.

According to a poll issued Tuesday by the Federal Reserve, small firms are still struggling financially, and many are having more difficulty managing supply chain issues and employing enough staff.

Today's China News

Hong Kong stocks dropped the most in five months on rising fears of another set of regulatory limitations being imposed on Chinese technology enterprises. HSBC fell after reporting results that fell short of analysts' estimates.

China will reduce taxes and levies on a larger scale this year, with an emphasis on helping the country's technological growth, according to Finance Minister Liu Kun.

New guidelines from China's Cyberspace Administration went into force on Tuesday, requiring Chinese internet platform firms with more than 1 million users' personal data to obtain clearance before listing abroad.
